BEHIND THE SCENES

Paul Peck, GXV product design engineer, has the job of putting ideas and concepts to paper. Paul's high ability to visualize is a perfect blend for "outside the box" thinking, which is found at GXV. Owner, Mike Van Pelt, who has spent years expedition traveling is the company's well for ideas. Paul taps that experience, combines it with his architectural degree from Drury University in Springfield, Missouri, construction work and four years as a mechanical service center entrepreneur. Paul's most recent achievement is the design work for GXV's newly released UXV-550.

There is more to Paul than just designing. He is a happily married man of 7 years with two beautiful daughters. He loves to work on motorcycles, ATVs and snowmobiles. Paul is also involved with volunteer coaching.

So when you buy your new UXV-550 from GXV and find the fit and finish to be exceptional, you'll know that Paul was an important part of your luxury Expedition Vehicle.

A CHILLING STORY

By René Van Pelt

My husband says to me, "do you still want to go to Antarctica?" "Of course," was my response, "but how would we get there?" After a long pause, he answers, "drive." After informing him that Antarctica was a long way from any other land he tells me that we could drive through South America, in our newly built awesome 4x4

Expedition Vehicle, down to Ushuaia, where we would take a cruise to Antarctica? Are you game?" "You bet."
